General Lesson Planning

Planning Your School Calendar

School Calendar

Minnesota law does not require a certain number of days each year in which a homeschool student must receive instruction. Parents are free to set up a schedule and provide instruction for any number of hours per day, during any portion of the year that best serves the student's and family's needs. This freedom from tracking days allows for tremendous flexibility in the scheduling of your school time and your supportive extracurricular activities! Using a planner to keep track of each family member's schedule is an efficient way to make the most of your days! These are some ways families choose to organize their homeschool schedules.

Traditional School Schedule: Some families tend to follow a traditional schedule that aligns closely with their local school district. Typically, this begins in September and ends in June, with established days off for holidays and other breaks, including weekends.

Year-Round School Schedule: A growing number of families choose to follow a more relaxed school year. This is loosely referred to as "year-round" scheduling, and includes many variations to best meet the family's needs.

- Some choose to do four days of school each week, with a few weeks off during the year as needed for breaks or holidays.
- Others follow a set routine of four to six weeks of instructional days followed by a week or two off, or another similar routine.
- Some families choose to follow a looser schedule where they school based on the pace of family life; sometimes that may mean schooling for a full week including weekends, and other times it means no school for a whole week. Holidays are fair game, and there is no consistent schedule routine.

Schedule Styles

There are many varieties of scheduling styles that you might follow. Find what works best for you!

Month-at-a-Glance: This is a general place to jot down the subjects completed in a day during that month. Simply write the current month at the top of the page. (pg 13)

Week-at-a-Glance: A bit more in-depth approach to the previous option, this planner includes options for traditional Monday-Friday approaches, or full-week options for those who also use the weekends. Simply fill out each day with what you plan to do, or what you accomplished that day. (pgs 14-18)

Block Schedule: This approach fills out the various hours in the day with set "blocks" of time. It functions on a clock schedule versus a set routine. (pg 22)

Loop Schedule: Some families choose to "loop" their special classes that are not completed every school day. If there are three specials that they wish to complete, then every third day they loop back to them. So if poetry, creative writing, and art are your loops, then day 1 is poetry, day 2 is creative writing, day 3 is art, and then you begin the loop again with day 4 poetry, day 5 creative writing, day 6 art, and so on and so forth. This planner has loop schedule options for both the typical school week of Monday-Friday, and the more relaxed year-round Sunday-Saturday approach. (pgs 23 & 24)

Delight-Directed/Unschooling: This method allows for a less rigid approach by following the student's interests. You may record what topic you studied together as well as what you covered. Example: your student is interested in the topic of sharks, and you did studies on what they ate, where they lived, how fast/ far they can swim, watched videos on how their gills worked, your student gave an oral report to extended family, etc. (pg 25)

The Bigger Picture

Recording Your Longterm Plans

This section of our planner is for pages that look at the bigger picture of the year as a whole, or even over the course of multiple years.

Course of Study: Use this page to keep a list of all the subjects and books your child uses for the year in one place. (pg 27)

Academic Goals for This Year: What are your "big picture" academic goals for your children? Do you want them to master long division? Be able to read fluently? Write down what growth you hope to see this year. (pg 28)

Future Plans: Record goals that you want to meet for your child prior to graduation. These may include field trips, movies, books to read, classes, life skills, etc. Use each column for a category, and write the future plans below. (pg 29)

Our Special Memories: So many wonderful things happen as part of the homeschool experience. That day when reading clicks, discovering the importance of multiplication, memorizing the periodic table—this is a place to record those memories. (pg 30)

Character Goals for This Year: Similar to Academic Goals for This Year, you can list the growth in character that you hope to cultivate in your children this school year. Does your perfectionist need to grow in patience? Is perseverance needed in your child who is willing to quit at the first challenge? Self-control for the procrastinator. Write down what you plan to encourage in your child this year. (pg 31)

Standardized Test Results: According to Minnesota law, you are required to have your child take a nationally norm-referenced standardized achievement test each year. You are NOT required to turn in the results to the school district. You should keep the results in your records. Scores and data are always private. However, if your child scores at or below the 30th percentile on the total battery score, you are required to obtain additional evaluation to determine if the child has learning problems.

Home educated students between the ages of seven and 16 (or 17 in some instances) are to be tested yearly using a nationally norm-referenced standardized achievement test. The requirement to use a nationally norm-referenced standardized achievement test ends when a home educated student turns 16 years old (unless the student just began homeschooling at age 16).

If you are registered with an organization that is a recognized Minnesota accrediting association, you are not required to test your children. (pg 31)

The Fun is in the Details

Getting the Most Out of Your Homeschool

Field Trips Taken: Many families count field trips as a full instructional day depending on the length of time spent at the destination, the degree of in-depth instruction, etc. This page is helpful to record information such as place, location, who attended with you, what was learned, etc. (pg 34)

Daily Exercise/P.E.: Getting in daily exercise is an important component of any education. (pg 35)

Get Outside Day Tracker: With so many options for online classes, it can be easy to forget to get outside into the sunshine for a bit. This page can be used to color in each day that you spend time outside. (pg 36)

Nature Walks: Getting outside and observing nature is not only a healthy activity, but one that can help to round out our observational science components. Use this page to allow your children to document when they have observed on their nature walks. (pg 37)

Book List: This is a great place to keep track of what books your child is reading, whether for reading challenges or for reading throughout the year. (pg 38)

Memory Verses: Record what memory verses your children have learned on this page. See their growth, and revist previous memorized verses to keep them fresh in their mind. (pg 39)

Learning Style Notes: It's not popular knowledge, but every child is born with their own learning style! Visual, Auditory, Kinesthetic... these represent different ways that a student learns best. (pg 40)

A good resource to discover your child's learning style is Homeschooling Methods by Paul Suarez.

To learn more about determining how your child learns best, try Dr. Sandi Queen's workshop recording Identifying Your Child's Learning Style and Learning to Teach to It.

Curriculum Notes: Along the lines of various learning styles are the different curriculum styles. Charlotte Mason, Classical, Unit Studies, Traditional... Use this sheet to make notes on what works best for your student(s). (pg 41)

To learn more about curriculum styles, check out: Choosing Curriculum Part 1 and Part 2.

Field Trips Taken

Field trips are a fun and important way to reinforce learning for all students. Field trips can be counted as an educational day. While it is not required, maintaining a log of field trips from each year can be beneficial and fun to look back on.
